PRINTER HEAD REFURBISHING

Printer head refurbishing is a process in which a faulty dot-matrix printer head is stripped to its last component. All the components are cleaned in a special chemical solution. After the first inspection, all worn-out parts like guides, pins and cables are replaced with new ones. Spot welding and silver brazing equipment is used in this process. The printer head is then reassembled and the second level inspection is carried out where an extensive test process is assessed ensuring “no failures” and a top quality product.

We believe in making our operation and service to you very simple and efficient.
